FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE AND GOOD SPORTS DONATE MORE THAN $580K IN NEW FOOTBALL EQUIPMENT TO HIGH SCHOOLS AND YOUTH PROGRAMS ACROSS THE COUNTRY

By partnering with Good Sports, every NFL club and Legends Youth Advisory Committee member nominated two high schools in high-need communities to receive brand new football gear.

August 2019 – The National Football League, all 32 clubs and the Legends Youth Advisory Committee collaborated with national nonprofit Good Sports to identify schools and youth programs to each receive $7,000 in brand new football gear. Collectively, $589,000 in equipment will be donated to high-need communities.

“By providing equipment to youth and high school football teams in selected areas, Good Sports is continuing to remove access barriers,” said Roman Oben, NFL Vice President of Youth and High School Football. “All 32 NFL clubs nominated local schools for football equipment donations. Every child, no matter the circumstance, should have the access to play the game of football.”

Financial concerns have been a barrier to participation in youth sports, and by providing community programs and high-risk schools with brand new equipment – for free – Good Sports is able to get more kids off the sidelines and into the game. Each NFL club and every member of the Legends Youth Advisory Committee selected two high schools or youth programs each to receive the new equipment.

Launched at the 2019 NFL Draft, the Legends Youth Advisory Committee assists and guides efforts to preserve and grow youth and high school football through peer-to-peer engagement. NFL Legends Mark Brunell, Nate Burleson, Trent Dilfer, Maurice Jones-Drew, Willie McGinest, Jordan Palmer, Chad Pennington, Michael Robinson, Deion Sanders and Bobby Taylor comprise the committee, which additionally generates inspiring conversations with youth and high school football communities about the values learned from playing football.

“At Good Sports, we believe that cost should not be a barrier for participation in sports and fitness activities,” said Melissa Harper, CEO and co-founder of Good Sports. “By partnering with the NFL and its clubs, we are able to provide equipment to give kids in need in 32 cities around the country a chance to play. This access is critical as the benefits of sports are proven to help kids develop socially, emotionally, physically, and academically. Simply put, kids who play do better and by bringing great partners together, we can make play possible for more children.”

Collectively, Good Sports and the National Football League are distributing more than $589,000 in brand new football equipment to a variety of high schools and youth programs across the country. These high schools and youth programs are all from communities of high need. In order to qualify for the grant, the schools had to have a majority of their student body on free or reduced lunch.
“This equipment has afforded our student-athletes with quality gear needed to participate safely in the sport of football,” said coach Demetrios Vrettos of donation recipient JS Morton High School in Berwyn, IL. “In years past, torn pants and girdles were distributed to our participants because our program did not have the means to suit up the entire team with quality gear. We now have the capacity to provide a satisfactory experience for our student-athletes.”
